An Editor Looks at the Microphone.

By Sir ROBERT DONALD, G.B.E., LL.D.

THERE is a coming issue which cannot be ignored—the extent to which broadcasting will interfere with the progress of the Press, or change its character. At this stage of development, radio is an ally, rather than a rival. It is a supplementary service, not an alternative. At first, wireless telegraphy was regarded as supplementary to cables. Now, it is looked upon as a serious competitor. Radio is a cheap universal information, news, education and entertainment service which is delivered into the homes of millions and can be broadcast to many more millions of listeners.

Already newspapers are jealous of the potential competitor. The combined Press organizations in Great Britain presented a case to the recent Broadcasting Committee to prove why the circulation of news by radio should be restricted to the present limits, which are that the service is sold to the Broadcasting Committee by all the associated news agencies for issue at a time which suits the newspapers and that all direct broadcasting should be confined to speeches without curtailment or description, or to the bare results of sporting and other events.

Hitherto, England has occupied a middle position in the radio world as between Europe and America. In Continental countries Governments have concerned themselves more directly with radio. In the United States the Government has left it to free and unfettered competition. Some American newspapers have their own broadcasting stations and there is nothing to stop the several hundreds of other American stations from circulating news. Up to now, there has been no serious development in this direction and the American Press has not been affected by the competition.

We are approaching the stage, however,

Sir ROBERT DONALD, G.B.E., LL.D., whose views are of particular interest owing to the fact that he was for many years the editor of a great London newspaper.

when the limitations placed upon radio cannot well be maintained. The London Station of the B.B.C. is like a great national newspaper with international affiliations. Its readers, or subscribers, will demand more news, and if the Press and news agencies put an embargo on the supply, the B.B.C. will be forced to collect its own news of all important events. It has been urged that it is beyond the means and the capacity of a broadcasting organization to collect foreign news and that it must remain dependent on existing agencies. That is not the case, as broadcasting stations could without difficulty arrange for an interchange of news.

Supposing, however, that listeners receive a larger service of news, it does not follow that the Press will suffer to any appreciable extent. A listener may be satisfied with the results of sporting events, but, as a rule, he will want to read the news which he has heard, just as an audience which listens to a great oration wants to see it in print. The daily paper will be left with its headlines, with its pictures, with its political articles, fiction and all its general features, to say nothing of its advertisements.

There are practical difficulties in the way of any very large encroachment on news distribution by broadcasting. Subscribers will not want to listen to verbatim reports of speeches, and when a Government monopoly begins to curtail speeches or give descriptive accounts of them, it cannot escape the charge of impartiality. Public men who speak into a microphone at public gatherings will be compelled to condense their remarks—which will be welcome to those who see, and by all who hear, them.

The Wireless Sermon.

A Church of England View. By the Rev. H. W. Fox, D.S.O.

THAT was a stimulating article which Mr. J. W. Robertson Scott contributed to The Radio Times of June 18th, suggesting a new use to which the broadcast sermon might be put.

This is not the place to discuss the causes of the decay of church-going, but whether the use of a loud speaker in churches would increase the number of worshippers or no, it would certainly relieve a serious situation with which the Church of England is faced at the present moment. On the one hand there is a growing shortage of clergy; they are dying more rapidly than they are being ordained. On the other hand, the increase in the cost of living has been nowhere more heavily felt than by the clergy, with their notoriously underpaid jobs.

For both these evils the remedy would seem to lie in developing a scheme for the amalgamation of parishes. But it is obvious that this would mean in most cases that the number of services for which the parson would be responsible would be duplicated, if not triplicated, and a parson, being after all only human, has not yet managed to be in two places at the same time.

Congregations, being also human and conservative, will object to any alterations in the fixed hours of service to which they have been accustomed for generations; probably the only services which they have attended at irregular hours have been those for their baptism, their marriage and their funeral, and in regard at any rate to the first and last of these they were not consulted. It is, then, rather for the purpose of meeting an actual need than with any idea of reviving the rural church that, as it seems to me, there is the opportunity of the loud speaker and the wireless sermon.

How far the whole service should be broadcast is another matter; the need for this does not appear to be so urgent. The greater part of Matins and Evensong can be lawfully read by a qualified layman, and the services of lay-people might be used in this way far more than they are at present. I think I express the feeling of most church-going folk when I say that for some psychological reason or other our common prayers will be more real if they are led by someone whom we can actually see. No one would suggest that the mystical part of the service should be "addressed" by an unseen studio choir, unless it be an occasional anthem; the canticles, the psalms and the hymns must be sung by the congregation, but at the same time addresses or congregational singing by such masters as Sir Walford Davies or Mr. Martin Shaw, broadcast to church, would help enormously to raise the standard of congregational singing.

I come back, then, to the question raised by Mr. Robertson Scott of the sermon broadcast by a loud speaker in church. I believe that there is every reason why the experiment should be tried. There is much to be said in its favour by the parson, no less than by those who listen to him. There are few clergy who do not have to deliver at least three sermons or addresses every week, some many more. Every time they speak they are expected to be fresh and stimulating; if not, the congregation will grumble and criticize. As a matter of fact, the thing is a mental and physical impossibility.

But most congregations would benefit from a variety of preachers not less than all parsons. With an efficient valve set there would be a wide choice of sermons that might be heard, and I imagine that an episcopal licence would not be required for switching on a Nonconformist in an Anglican pulpit. It would do us Anglicans a world of good to listen sometimes to a Free Churchman, besides helping on the cause of Christian unity.

The more widely, however, the loud speaker is used in churches, the greater must be the care exercised by the B.B.C. in selecting their preachers, care both as to the matter spoken and to the manner of delivery. The B.B.C. must not be content with its present average standard; it must set itself to give nothing less than the highest and the best in preaching as in all other parts of its programme.

It will be said, no doubt, that if we do not see our preacher, much of the effect of his preaching will be lost. I do not think that this need be so. It is true that seats in certain churches where the pulpit is out of sight are the last to be occupied; but the desire to see the preacher is partly a matter of curiosity and largely a matter of habit.

In my own opinion, for what it is worth, the advantages of the experiment which Mr. Robertson Scott has suggested far outweigh any possible disadvantages. It is for the clergy to take the first step, and suggest it to their people, for if the proposal to install a loud speaker in a church comes from the Parochial Church Council, its action may be misunderstood by a sensitive incumbent. Let the clergy act; it will be greatly to their own relief, and, if I be not misunderstood, I would add that it will be to the benefit of their congregations.

Radio has several advantages over newspapers. It beats the Press both in speed and cheapness. The tendency will be to reduce the annual licence fee and to use surplus profits for improving the service. Those who supply the revenue for a limited public service of this kind will resent making enforced contributions to national taxation. Listeners will number several millions and will become a well organized body cutting across the usual party lines, but a body to whose wishes politicians must pay attention.

While the Press, as the chief medium for circulating news, will not suffer seriously from radio, it may be affected in other ways. The spoken newspaper will be a check on the printed newspaper. It will stop suppression, keep the balance level and be a healthy corrective.

Also radio offers an alternative to the Press when, for some reason, newspapers fail to appear. This proved to be the case during the General Strike in England last May. The newspaper industry was the first victim of the strike. For some days no newspapers appeared; only a few very small emergency sheets. For the two weeks of the strike the improvised Press, including the Government newspaper, The British Gazette, only produced a very small percentage of the copies normally circulated. The public had to rely on broadcasting for early news of the strike and for such other news as the British Broadcasting Company was able to distribute. An audience of about twenty millions was thus reached directly or indirectly. The public discovered that they could follow world events without newspapers.

There was a considerable increase in the sale of receiving sets during the strike and in the number of licences issued, which now total for the British Isles over 2,050,000.

Such are, as far as one can safely envisage at the moment, the future developments of the next few years, but no limit can be put to the marvellous achievements of wireless.

On the same evening one of the late Alfred Lester's sketches, "The Village

To Canterbury With Chaucer.

By E. Le Breton Martin.

CHAUCER'S Canterbury Tales start with the meeting of nine-and-twenty persons of mixed rank at the Tabard Inn, in Southwark, on an April evening somewhere between the years 1386-87, and are made to coincide with a pilgrimage that we know Chaucer himself to have made, at that time. The host of the inn was a certain Harry Bailly, a man of standing and importance, and he offers to show the pilgrims the way, and, to lighten the journey, proposes that each of them shall tell two tales on the outward journey and two on the way back.

A strange company they were; for besides Chaucer and Harry Bailly, there were a Miller, Doctor, Merchant, Sergeant-at-law, Franklin, Knight, Reeve, Squire, Squire's Yeoman, Ploughman, Poor Parson, Nun's Priest, Second Nun, Prioress, Shipman, Manciple, Clerk of Oxford, Wife of Bath, Pardoner, Summoner, Monk, Friar, Goldsmith, Weaver, Haberdasher, Tapster and Cook.

Now it must be remembered that such a party of men and women, mounted on steeds good, bad and indifferent, would of necessity travel slowly, and the roads were bad in those days. It was at walking pace they went, taking four days to do the fifty-six miles journey, the usual stages being on the first night Dartford, fifteen miles from London, on the second Rochester, thirty miles, on the third Ospringe, forty-seven miles, arriving on the fourth day at Canterbury.

It is not my intention here to refer to the various tales told by the pilgrims. It is of the pilgrimage itself I wish to speak, and to show how, even after the lapse of all the years that have passed since Chaucer's day, we may still follow in the footsteps of that pleasant "company of sundry folk."

Along the Borough, past St. George's Church, went the pilgrims, then down Great Dover Street, along the Old Kent Road and the New Cross Road, and so to Deptford. We then turn up Blackheath Road and so up to Blackheath Hill. The road to follow here is probably the one running by the side of Greenwich Park. At thirteen miles from London we reach Dartford. Here the pilgrims—and it must be remembered that they would do their sightseeing even as modern tourists do—would probably have visited a little church before reaching Dartford, where they would find good accommodation for man and beast. To-day "The Bull" at Dartford is a very old house, where traces are still to be found of medieval times, while there are brasses in the church dating from 1402. Of course, the pilgrims would have made their devotions at the shrine of St. Edmund in Dartford, and would probably have discussed Wat Tyler's revolution of only a few years previously.

They rose early on the second day, and it is probable that they spent some time in Dartford, for the thread of the tales is not taken up till ten a.m. They had their first glimpse of Rochester probably from the hill near Cobham Park, and they crossed the Medway into Rochester by an ancient wooden bridge, and with interest at a new stone bridge. Led, being built further down the river, Not thern Railway bridge now spans walled, a little city only half a mile long by a quarter of a mile wide. The pilgrims would have admired the splendid Norman Castle, and would have paid their devotions to the shrine of St. William of Rochester and inspected the Cathedral.

Rochester—Chatham—Raham—Moor Street—Newington, with its large and interesting church—Keyed Hill—Sittingbourne—Bapchild—Beacon Hill—Ospringe, and so the end of the third day.

Next day on through Preston—Boughton-under-Blean—where the pilgrims were overtaken by the Canon's yeoman—and so on to Harbledown, where was the leper hospital founded about 1080 by Lanfranc, now an almshouse, with its chapel on the hill above, both well worth seeing by modern pilgrims. Here also is the Black Prince's Well, the water from which is still in some repute for its curative powers. Just beyond Harbledown all devout pilgrims in Chaucer's time would dismount from their horses, and complete the journey on foot, for it was at this point that the tower of Canterbury Cathedral came into view, and an inspiring sight it must have been, for in those days there was a great central spire, surmounted by a great golden angel, shining gloriously in the sunlight.

And so we may say good-bye to Chaucer's pilgrims as they passed through the West Gate of Canterbury, to pay their devotions at the shrine of the "blissful Martyr" Thomas à Becket, who had been so foully done to death in the great Cathedral two hundred years before.

Although Chaucer did not finish his story of the pilgrimage, there is preserved for us his Tale of Beryn, in which he tells us that the pilgrims' headquarters in Canterbury were "The Chequers of the Hope", a very ancient hostelry, of which some of the lower part still remains in a shop at the left of the entrance to Mercury Lane.

The pilgrimage was made at about the same rate that it would take us easily to walk to Canterbury to-day. The pilgrims visited churches, shrines and places of interest on the way even as we do, though maybe in a different spirit. They got to their inns early, and were up betimes to make a holiday jaunt of their piety.

And even though the times have changed, we moderns may still tread the same earth as the pilgrims trod, and say one to another in our modern English speech:—

Sires, now in the morrow tyme
Out of your hostelry I caught you ryde
All this ground on which we ben ridyng
Till that we comen to Caunterbury Toun.

The Children's Corner.

London and Daventry News.

WE had hoped to be able to give our readers this week the final details of certain new plans which we have been working out in connection with Competitions, but this has turned out to be impossible for the moment. Next week, however, we hope to be able to tell you more about the subject. Meanwhile, we would like competitors who have been successful in the last two Competitions please to realize that we have not in any way forgotten them.

Auntie Geraldine and Uncle Rex are returning from their holidays at the end of this week, and on and after July 18th they will be in the Studio again on their usual days.

There are two or three quite interesting things in the London programmes for the coming week. On Tuesday, July 18th, we are having what grown-up people call a song cycle; that is to say, a group of several songs written about the same subject. In this case it is "Old Furniture." There are about half-a-dozen songs, and they are connected with dialogue which makes the whole thing into a kind of musical story.

William and Winnie.

On Friday, July 16th, we are including in the programme the first of several stories taken from two very popular books, "Just William" and "More William," by Richmal Crompton. I expect lots of you know these stories and have had many a good laugh over them. If you do happen to know them you will probably like to hear some of them again; if you do not know them, you are sure to find yourself pleased and thrilled.

On Saturday, July 17th, we are having the third of Mr. A. A. Milne's wonderful Winnie-the-Pooh stories. This time "Winnie-the-Pooh Finds a Tail," and the way in which he does it, and the story of how the tail comes to be lying about for him to find, is just the kind of thing that Mr. A. A. Milne does so well.

Have You a Dog or a Cat?

If so, have you yet entered it for the "218" Show? Do not forget the closing date is July 17th. The dates of the Shows are Leeds, July 24th; Bradford, July 28th, in the Gibraltar Barracks, Chapeltown, and Belle Vue Barracks, Manningham Lane, respectively. Remember that the success of the Show depends on you, and do not be afraid of entering your pet because you think it is of no particular breed and cannot possibly win a prize.

Uncle John is looking forward to seeing you all there, whether you have a pet or not, so don't disappoint him!

Uncle Hobbie on Hobbies.

Uncle Hobbie, of Dundee, has given his farewell talk for the present. His jolly voice will be heard again in the autumn, when he intends to deal particularly with indoor hobbies. A little bird whispered that he is also going to tell everyone how to make Christmas presents at home.

That the Radio Godfather's fortnightly messages are eagerly looked forward to is certain, judging by the many beautiful things that are said about them. In those little chats, he invariably contrives to make radio the foundation for bringing out exquisite little morals. It is hoped that some day it may be possible to have them all bound and circulated.

THE YOUNG IDEA.

William Miller, aged eleven and a half, who carried off the Open Challenge Cup for instrumentalists at the recent Aberdeen Competition Festival. When broadcasting from the Aberdeen Station during the course of the Festival Mr. Percy Scholes, the B.B.C.'s Music Critic, publicly presented this promising young musician with a cheque for five guineas towards the expense of his further musical education, this sum having been sent to Mr. Scholes by a listener for application to "any suitable good purpose." Several other listeners have since made further kind gifts.

Holiday-Time in Glasgow.

The Glasgow Children's Corner is suffering heavy casualties, no less a person than Auntie Cyclone herself having, metaphorically speaking, been removed from the front line and conveyed to a rest home in France. In other words, she is on holiday at a French watering-place, and the Uncles are spending all their spare time brushing up their knowledge of French in an endeavour to cope with the situation on her return.

It appears that the weather at the aforementioned beauty spot is everything that could be desired. Shrimps gambol about the shore in millions, sardines are as tame as church-mice, and the croaking of countless frogs lulls the inhabitants to sleep every night. Auntie Cyclone has written to say that she has discovered a very rare kind of grasshopper which has been captured alive after a prolonged struggle, and is being brought home as a trophy. This unique animal will doubtless have its hopping grounds transferred to the Studio sofa, and due notification will be made so that visitors may come and see the wonder.

BRAHMS' HORN TRIO.

(NEWCASTLE, SUNDAY.)

THIS work, written for Pianoforte, Violin and Horn, is one of the composer's rather rare essays in writing Chamber Music pieces that include wind instruments. He provided alternative Cello and Viola parts for this Trio, to be used when the Horn was not available, but the particularly rich, velvety tone of the Horn best suits the melodies Brahms has written.

There are four Movements.

I.

A rather slow Movement. It opens with the First Main Tune, in two-time, given first to Violin and then to Horn. Attached to it is a subsidiary theme (starting with two long notes, descending), first heard in dialogue between Piano and Violin.

The Second Main Tune (again introduced by the Violin) is much more animated, and is easily recognizable by being in three-time.

After the usual Development of this material, the Recapitulation deals with the First Tune only, not, as is usual in such Movements, with both main themes.

II.

A Scherzo. The Piano races off with octaves in three-time. When the other instruments enter a moment later it is with a bold phrase in two-time, the rhythmic contrast of which, whenever it appears, is one of the features of the Movement. This is a favourite device of Brahms.

The Horn has a smooth Second Tune, and then the two ideas are fully developed and repeated, and so the first part of the Movement closes. Its middle section ("Trio") is much gentler. The first part is then repeated.

III.

This is a beautifully expressive Slow Movement, largely of the nature of a conversation between Horn and Violin against a background of Piano tone, lovely both in subject matter, harmony and rhythmic variety.

IV.

The Finale is a lively Movement, though not without its deeper moments. Its opening theme is derived from a fragment that the Violin played, very near the end of the Slow Movement.

The Second Main Tune begins softly with one of Brahms' favourite arpeggio (harp-like) figures, first on the Piano, immediately imitated by the Violin.

MOZART'S "DON GIOVANNI" OVERTURE.

(CARDIFF, TUESDAY.)

The story of the escapades of the libertine Don Juan, who was finally delivered over to the Evil One, was treated operatically by Mozart in a half-comic, half-tragic spirit. Don Giovanni was described as a "Comic Opera," but the dramatic elements were never lost sight of.

The Overture emphasises the sombre side of the story of Don Juan. Its slow Introduction utilises themes associated in the Opera with the statue of the man he has murdered, which comes to life and drags him down to hell.

Solemn chords on Woodwind and Brass are heard above eerie String passages. Sudden, commanding interjections, followed by soft up-bowings, create an atmosphere of strangeness and fear.

The main body of the Overture (very quick) takes us back to the Don's days of unalloyed delight in amorous adventure.

Its First Main Tune is that on the Violins, heard at once. This comes to a decisive close.

Programme Pieces.

The Second Main Tune opens with a strong chord for Full Orchestra, and descending scales for the Violins.

With this admixture of grave and gay, but chief in the dashing spirit in which Don Juan looked at life, the Overture bows along. At the end, the excitement is calmed and the way prepared for the serious events of the First Act.

PROKOFIEV'S "CLASSICAL SYMPHONY."

(LONDON, GLASGOW, ETC., FRIDAY.)

Prokofiev, born in 1891, is one of the younger band of Russian composers in whose music emotion has little place. His frequent use of repeated rhythmic figures, instead of "development" of themes in the older manner, is characteristic of much modern music. Parts of his works may roughly be described as being written in more than one key at once.

The title of his Classical Symphony (written in 1916-17) denotes that the composer has for once adopted Haydn and Mozart as models of style.

The music is very clear and easy to follow. There are four Movements.

The First Movement uses the orthodox two Main Tunes, the First opening at once, on the Violins, and the Second also being heard from the same instruments. (This can be recognized by its big leaps of two octaves and its run downstairs, taking several steps at a leap.)

The Second Movement is a slow one. Its one Main Tune appears several times, with episodes in between.

The Third Movement is a Gavotte, instead of the Minuet almost invariably found in the older Symphony. Strings and Woodwind play the very short first section. Then Flutes and Clarinets have a middle section, and the first part is repeated.

The Finale is a very lively dance. Strings open the ball, and Woodwind has the Second Main Tune.

SCHUMANN'S "MANFRED" OVERTURE.

(MANCHESTER, FRIDAY.)

Schumann was a fervent admirer of Byron, and in 1848, when he was thirty-eight, he put his whole heart into the composition of an Overture and fifteen pieces of incidental music for the stage presentation of the poet's drama Manfred.

"Never," he averred, "have I expended such love and strength on any previous composition." "I consider it," he wrote to Liszt, "one of the finest children of my brain."

The Overture does not seek to follow the incidents of the drama. It is a piece of mood painting, depicting the sombre, passionate character of Count Manfred, a man of bold and powerful impulses, who sold himself to the devil, lived aloof from men, and died tormented by remorse.

It is possible that by immersing himself so deeply in this tragic story, Schumann strengthened the gloomy obsession that brought about his mental collapse and early death.

The Overture begins with a slow Introduction. Very soon the Violins have a syncopated fragment which, after the speed has been accelerated, we find as the beginning of the First Main Tune of the Overture proper.

It is repeated, and a linking passage leads us to the Second Main Tune, a descending, wailing, Violin melody. There are actually several short sections in this Second Subject, each highly expressive of some mood or emotion.

The bulk of the Overture consists of the treatment of these several sectional ideas, with the usual re-statement of the two Main Tunes coming in after the discussion has gone on for a little. In the usual way, the Overture would thus come to its end, but after the Second Main Tune has appeared, Woodwind and Trumpets sound a note of solemnity, and the quick movement fades away, giving place to a repetition of the slow Introduction, as epilogue.

"Experts" Who Wreck Your Set.

(Listeners are reminded that we do not consider anonymous letters for publication. Preference is given to letters which contain interest and novelty. The Editor reserves the right to abridge.)

WHAT protection have we against firms who profess to be experts on wireless receiving sets and prove to be devastators?

I had a very good four valve receiving set with detector and 3 L.F. valves. Something, to me undetectable, went wrong with the set and I consulted a firm of the type I have indicated. A youth called, could not detect what was wrong, and took the set away. Two days later I was informed that the whole set had been dismantled and would be rewired, at an estimate of thirty shillings. Thinking that great improvements would ensue, I agreed. A week later, the set was returned to me. Not a sound could I get from it. I found three faulty connections through bad soldering. The youth reappeared and again took the set away. I then heard that the primary of the second transformer had been burnt out and that a new one could be replaced for another thirty shillings. I remonstrated and suggested that the faulty transformer should be sent to Messrs. —, Ltd., who very kindly replaced the faulty one. The firm I had been dealing with wrote to tell me of this, saying that the cost of rewiring would be thirty-five shillings, and that they had replaced the new transformer free of charge. On the receipt of my cheque, they would return the set.

Again I remonstrated and the set was returned. All the switches had been reversed, the H.T. switch had been disconnected, the rheostat of the first valve would not work except when turned to "Max" owing to an attempt having been made to solder the connections to the terminals in cobalt. The only copy of the circuit that I had designed for me by a wireless enthusiast friend, had been partially burnt, and a new circuit was sent in its place which does not disconnect or connect the fourth valve when the third is being used. The cabinet was badly damaged.

I paid the bill, and wrote to the manager of the firm asking him to come and see the set in the interests of other clients who may have their sets placed at the mercy of his youthful devastator. I have received no reply.

Is there a black list of such firms? Could not some steps be taken to grant certificates to firms who really could advise amateur enthusiasts like myself and really could do decent work? If some such plan could be evolved, from my bitter experience, I should feel that the safeguarding of other amateurs would well repay the robbery that I have suffered. "RADIOGRAPHIC RADIO," London, W.

(Unfortunately, our correspondent's unhappy experience is not unique. His letter is typical of many that come to us from time to time. The moral of it all is clearly that purchasers of wireless sets and apparatus must take care to deal only with thoroughly trustworthy and reputable firms. A little time and trouble spent in seeking out the best qualified dealers in the locality is the best way to avoid a heavy and vexatious expenditure in money as well as time and trouble later on. — Editor, The Radio Times.)

The Wireless Sermon.

I CONGRATULATE you on the elegant article "Reviving the Rural Church." Wireless services, however, would not be a success unless the congregations were gathered early enough to sing a few hymns before the transmission started. And the valve set would need to be conspicuously visible, also the loud speaker. Unless the source of sound can be gazed at, many minds would wander into meditations upon millinery. I have found that a concealed "loud-speaker," even in a parlour, is a failure, as regards listening conversation. Unless such a service was organized by those possessing intelligent insight into human nature, it would fail to impress, or to become popular. — E. R. WATSON, 79, Glenslipin Street, Belfast.

Syncopating the Classics.

MR. HYLTON says that the power to love music is everyone's birthright. Granted, but only about one person in twenty develops that faculty. You cannot appreciate music fully unless you are familiar with some of its fundamental principles. Are we, then, justified in lowering the standard for all, to suit the limited capacity of those (probably the majority) who are insufficiently interested to make themselves "en rapport" with the best musical fare?

That is precisely what the syncopated symphonic orchestra is doing. Because the masses cannot appreciate the ordinary symphonic works as they were written, and intended to be performed, we are having introduced, at the expense of the finer harmony and exquisite contrapuntal treatment, an additional factor which does not tickle our musical ear at all, but which merely intrigues our sense of time. It is impossible to introduce syncopation without disturbing the musical balance of any serious composition. Syncopation is the displacement of accent, produced by prolonging a note begun on an unaccented part of a bar, over a more accented part—distortion!

Radio is unquestionably doing much to advance our national musical taste, the broadcasting of the Hallé concerts last year and the chamber music from the new Chelvi Studios being especial features. In fact, our national taste is developing so rapidly that in three years we shall not be listening to the syncopated symphonies, as Mr. Hylton suggests, but to the natural music of Bach, Beethoven, Mozart and Liszt, and fully enjoying this too. — J. W. MASON, Holborn Avenue, Nottingham.

POINTS FROM LETTERS.

HIRE in bird land, where I live. I thought I knew something of the ways of birds through my daily comradeship with them. But I confess that every flash of radiant wings and every trill of rippling melody has gained an added fascination since wireless has conveyed to me the results of the loving studies of their learned interpreter, Professor C. J. Patten, to whom we all owe a deep debt of gratitude for his recent Talks from Sheffield. — EDDIE K. HADFEN, Coombe Hill, Surrey.

On the A.30 road between Boscawen and Rudon, North Cornwall, there is a small village called Wanhuse Corner with seven houses and five of them have the wireless. Can this be beaten? — JOHN J. SMITH, St. Gennys, Holesworthy.

Is this parish there are 140 people living in thirty-one houses; seven of these with their forty residents have wireless installations. This is a pretty good average. H. PRIESTLAND, Colney Rectory, Norwich.

ARE YOU GETTING GOOD RECEPTION?

WE understand that some of the wireless apparatus purchased during the recent General Strike is giving unsatisfactory service, with the result that many new listeners do not yet know how accurate and enjoyable broadcast reception can be. This is very much to be regretted, and we strongly advise all listeners who are dissatisfied with the quality of their reception to have their sets adjusted or altered by the makers or sellers so as to secure the perfect reproduction of speech and music which is now obtainable.

The Alternative Programme.

Our experiments were on a large scale to prove how such a disability would be manifest in actual practice, and the conditions were somewhat simulated by giving two separate programmes—one from

Finally, it should be said with the utmost emphasis that these tests are purely of an experimental nature and argue only that the Broadcasting Company is interested in gathering data finally to frame a new scheme of distribution to bring about the desirable revision which might give to all listeners alternative programmes. Speculation as to the actual methods to be used is useless and even damaging at present, because the Broadcasting Company cannot come to any definite conclusion until the termination of certain experiments, which are incidentally bound up with the new station at Daventry, are concluded.

Church Music at Aberdeen.

A recital of Church Music by the Presentors' Choir will be given from the Aberdeen Station on Sunday evening, July 18th. This body specialises in the Psalm tones, which at one time were such an essential part of public worship in Scotland, and which have not lost their hold, in the Highlands, even to this day.

In Memory of Barts.

The weekly Scottish programme from Aberdeen on Wednesday, July 21st, will be devoted entirely to Burns. January 18th is the day when Scotsmen all over the world foregather to pay tribute to the greatest of Scottish poets, and on July 21st, which is the anniversary of his death, it is fitting that the passing of the great Bard should be commemorated. On this evening the beautiful songs we owe to Burns will be sung by Miss Letta Dunn and Mr. G. L. Ramsay.

Duo at Aberdeen.

Duets by two male singers are not a frequent feature of broadcasting, but Mr. Herbert Thorne and Mr. Harry Brindle are taking part together in the Aberdeen programme on Thursday, July 22nd. These singers, both of whom are well known to listeners, are to include duets in their programme, which is to be entirely operatic.

Sketches from Tankray.

The anniversary of the birth, on July 18th, of William Makepeace Thackeray, one of the literary giants who raised the English novel to its high position in early-Victorian days, will be commemorated by the Edinburgh Station on Tuesday, July 20th, when listeners will hear one or two character sketches from Thackeray given by Lady Margaret Sackville, the poetess.

Daventry's Birthday
DAVENTRY Station celebrates its first birthday on Tuesday, July 27th, when Capt. F. P. Eckerley, as a special feature, will frame the programme commemorating the conception and birth of the world's premier broadcasting station.
It is hoped to reproduce for listeners a summary of the story of how the idea of Daventry originated, how it was discussed, sanctioned, and ultimately translated into reality.
The special poem for the opening ceremony of the station, written by Mr. Alfred Noyes, will also be read, and the sounds of the machinery of the station "starting up" will be heard.
It is proposed to give representations of the reception of Daventry programmes in various parts of the country in a rural district, in a shepherd's hut on a snow-covered hillside of the news of the end of the strike being received at a country vicarage, and, finally, Big Ben heard by a lonely settler during a relay of the High Power Station's programme in Canada.

GLASGOW NEWS.

THE name of Lina Leumann, who died in 1918, is well known to all lovers of music. As a writer of careful lyrics with plenty of melody, she was a popular figure in the world of song. Many listeners in Scotland are probably unaware that Lina Leumann's mother was a daughter of Robert Leumann, at one time Lord Provost of Edinburgh. Her father, Rudolph Leumann, was a well-known portrait painter, one of his best efforts being a picture of the poet Robert Browning which is in a London gallery to-day. The best work that Lina Leumann composed was a setting of part of the "Rudwig" of Omar Khayyam, which is known as In a Persian Garden and this will be broadcast in its entirety from the Glasgow Station on Sunday afternoon, the anniversary of her composer's birthday. This work, which is set for soprano, contralto, tenor and bass, with piano, was originally performed in 1914 and was the first great success the composer achieved and probably established her reputation. The Dairy Churn and The Year of Wakefield were subsequent works which have never been so popular, and in her later years she did not attempt anything on such a large scale. Her Bird Song Cycle is very popular with singers, although to be effectively rendered, the performer's technique must be of a high order. The artists will take part in the performance of In a Persian Garden. Miss Mavis Bennett (soprano), Miss Gladys Palmer (contralto), Mr. Leonard G. Winge (tenor) and Mr. Robert Bayly (bass).

A skin perfectly clear and fresh

JUNE—whose charm and beauty was one of the causes of the success of "Mercenary Mary" at the Hippodrome—described in an interview how, each night before retiring, she smooths Pond's Cold Cream over her face, neck and hands, taking it off after a few moments with a wad of cotton-wool.

"I find it brings all the impurities out of my skin." Soap and water cleanse the surface only.

"With regard to Pond's Vanishing Cream, I find it a very pleasant cream to use in the daytime," concluded June, "because of its refreshing odour and because it disappears into the skin instantly."

Pond's Vanishing Cream forms an excellent base for powder.

At last the shockproof Valve

THERE is little need to ask "Which is the most vulnerable part of any valve?" Even a person who had never owned a Wireless Set would be able to guess the answer. Ever since Edison introduced the carbon filament into radio, the first electric lamp, the glowing thread within its crystal globe has been an object of

The wireless valve is not new to the electric lamp, but by your relation to the light more recent. Whereas in the latter, efficiency is measured by the amount of light given, the whole of science have been tried to obtain in the valve the maximum efficiency with the minimum of light.

And now that a new Cossor Valve has been evolved with a special filament which operates at a glow almost indiscernible we appear to be within a reasonable distance of a valve which will never wear out.

But filament glow has been only one of the problems which Cossor has faced and conquered. Another—almost equally as important—has been the perfection of a system of filament suspension which would successfully withstand the thousand and one shocks which every valve must encounter in use.

The Cossor Point One, now being placed on the market, is the first valve in which the new system of Co-axial Mounting has been introduced. For the first time there is no shock which can displace the three elements—the Filament, the Grid and the Anode. It is secured, mounted together at the top as well as at the bottom.

How this is effected can be readily understood from the illustration above. At the top of the A.ode will be seen a special insulator which protects the filament. It is only secured to the support and through the center, the support tube is threaded a fine wire which acts as the third support to the filament.

Thus it has been found possible to evolve a system of construction which will resist without harm the hardest of shocks. Even if the elements in this Cossor Point One should be displaced through an accidental blow they must always be in the same relative positions.

Co-axial Mounting is destined to be one of the most important developments of the year. In this first announcement it is obviously impossible to enlarge in detail upon its many advantages.

Try out this astonishing new Valve now. Remember its current consumption is barely one-tenth of an ampere. One super-heterodyne fitted with seven of them actually takes less current than a single-valve Set using one ordinary valve.

Vesti la giubba

It's rotten when the loud speaker does the old soldier, and fades away right in the middle of the programme.

Get the accumulator which "asks for it." The P. & R. "Gravity-float" tells you, by one look at the floats, whether it is fully charged, half-charged or wanting re-charge.

Maybe you, a man knowing accumulators, will say that the float tell-tales are just a stunt, like graduating condenser dials in metres of wave-length. Maybe you're right—but it's handy, isn't it?

If you want to know what kind of accumulator a P. & R. is, consider these points—extra-plate area, giving additional power; "creeping" stopped by petroleum-gland terminals; mess and corrosion and surface leakage prevented by anti-spray vents; stated-capacity always the actual, valve-burning capacity.

There's no room here to tell it all. Even if you don't want a P. & R. just now, we should like you to send a postcard for Booklet X to Peto & Radford, 50, Grosvenor Gardens, S.W.1. It gives the technique of this and many other very good batteries of all types and capacities.

Where the Brown comes from

THE history of the Brown is the record of a great endeavour. First in the Loud Speaker field—in the days before Broadcasting began—only by continual striving has its lead been held. From a small sale confined to this country, the demand for Brown Instruments has risen until to-day the extensive works illustrated above are continually working at full pressure to supply a world-wide need.

There is no secret in Brown success; the reason lies solely in the instruments themselves. When we say that the volume and tone of Brown Loud Speakers and Headphones are unrivalled, we are not voicing an opinion—we are stating a fact. You can prove this for yourself by hearing the Brown at your dealer's—he is anxious to demonstrate to you.

An Instrument for everyone at every price.

Brown Loud Speakers are made in the following types—H.I. 100 ohms £5 5 0, 2,000 ohms £5 0 0, 4,000 ohms £5 10 0, H.2. 120 ohms £2 5 0, 2,000 ohms £2 0 0, 4,000 ohms £1 10 0, H.3. 2,000 ohms and install our ELECTRON or SUPERIAL—the aerals which abolished Aerial masts, and made insulators, lead-in tubes, etc., etc., an unnecessary extravagance. Don't spoil your garden with a clumsy pole with its mass of wires and ugly china insulators when an ELECTRON or SUPERIAL will provide you with better reception.

A simple indoor (ELECTRON or SUPERIAL) Aerial may be looped in the loft out of sight, one end tied to the rafters and looped back again, the other end brought under the eaves direct to the set through the nearest window (with no insulators or lead-in tube). The window may be jammed tightly on the ELECTRON or SUPERIAL.

SUPERIAL
THE KING OF AERIALS

The ELECTRON EARTH MAT is supremely efficient. Its very simplicity compels it. The enormous surface offered by the innumerable strands of fine mesh of which it is composed affords unusual freedom of release to the high-frequency currents. The ELECTRON EARTH MAT is made of the most expensive phosphor bronze fine-grained gauze, mounted on a strong metal rim. The price includes 25 feet of EARTH WIRE.

FOR LONG-DISTANCE RECEPTION

The mathematical combination of heavily tinned strands with a plated copper core in SUPERIAL greatly improves the reception, both of voice and instrumental music. Superial will increase the long-distance range of your set.

USE ELECTRON EXTENSION WIRE 50 feet from the set in one room to the loud speaker in another, or even outdoors! Furthermore, you actually get improved reception because the EXTENSION WIRE considerably enhances the musical tone. No further insulation required.

7 P.M. advantages that save you money, give better reception and cost no more to secure than the price of an ordinary valve—

1 GREATER EMISSION SURFACE.

P.M. Filaments have up to 3½ times greater emission surface than ordinary filaments ensuring a much wider range of power for economical operation; in fact these new filaments are so conservatively rated that they give ample results at lower voltages than marked & will stand up to a reasonable overload.

2 LONGER VALVE LIFE.

The special alloy of rare metals that forms the heavy covering of P.M. Filaments is prepared by a patented process that secures a copious flow of electrons and the operating temperature is so low that this precious alloy cannot be discharged, a definite proof of long useful life.

3 UNBREAKABLE FILAMENT.

P.M. Filaments are longer than ordinary filaments, and retain their ductility even after 1,000 hours life, so that it is possible to tie them in a knot. At no time does the low operating temperature cause sag, and these filaments are specially set around the five strong resilient hooks so that they are free from tension and cannot be broken except by the very roughest handling.

4 NO VISIBLE GLOW.

The extreme economy in heat of P.M. Filaments can be judged by the fact that no sign of glow can be discerned during operation.

5 REDUCED CURRENT CONSUMPTION.

P.M. Filaments only require one-tenth ampere filament current, giving up to seven times the life of each accumulator charge, a reduction to one-seventh in your cost of accumulator maintenance.

6 NO MICROPHONIC NOISES.

The unique method of mounting the filament within the field of the grid and anode, so that the filament lies without tension or sag in its correct position, and all the electrons are well-aided and controlled, completely eliminates all microphonic noises, leaving an effective background of silence in emphasis faithful reception.

7 MAJESTIC VOLUME.

Every P.M. Valve is a master valve in its own class, designed to give you Perfect Radio Reception.

Note that the vastly increased length of the P.M. Filament completely within the field of the anode and grid is obviously greater than that of any other valve on the market.

The man who knows about valves will tell you that it is the filament that counts and this is what you pay for. He will tell you that a filament with P.M. advantages will give you 33% better results, reduce your maintenance costs and last you many times longer than any other, no matter what new constructional features are employed.
